No.56 Squadron

History

Number 56 Squadron is one of the oldest and most successful squadrons of the Royal Air Force, with battle honours from many of the significant air campaigns of both World War I and World War II.

The squadron was formed on 8 June 1916 at Gosport, England and was posted to France in April 1917 as part of the Royal Flying Corps. The squadron was equipped with the then brand-new SE5 fighter. Its arrival at the front with the latest fighter, combined with the unusually high proportion of experienced pilots in its ranks, led to rumours among its German opponents that the squadron was specifically the "Anti-Richterhofen Squadron," dedicated to the removal of the Red Baron. Although there was no truth in these rumours, the squadron did shoot down and kill Richterhofen's nearest 1917 rival - Lieutenant Werner Voss - in an epic dogfight.

By the end of the war, 56 Squadron had scored 402 victories. During the course of the war, 40 of the squadron's pilots were killed in action, 20 were wounded, and 31 were taken prisoner.

No. 56 Squadron was home to many famous fighter aces during the war. Albert Ball was an original member of the squadron but was killed in May 1917 and awarded the Victoria Cross. Arthur Rigg Davids spent his brief flying career with the squadron and ended the war as arguably the RFC's most famous pilot. James McCudden added 50 victories to his score during his time with unit, earning the Victoria Cross in the process. Other famous pilots include Reginald Hodge, Gerald J. C. Maxwell, Geoffrey Hilton Bowman, Richard Maybery, Leonard Monteagle Barlow, Henry Burden, Cyril Cross, Maurice Mawling, William Roy Irwin, Edric Broadberry, Kenneth William Junor, Cecil Lewis, Keith Murgant, Harold Wallbridge, William Spurratt Filding-Johnson, William Owey Boger, Charles Jeffs, Harold Mulgrew, and Duncan Grinnell-Milne, the latter of whom became the unit's last Officer Commanding before inactivation.

Post-WWI History

The squadron disbanded in January 1920 but was shortly reformed thereafter at Aboukir, Egypt and equipped with Sopwith
